

Verb Tenses:

Future Perfect

The future perfect verb tense is the past participle tense used with will have or sometimes shall have.

Future tense: I will run.

Future perfect tense: I will have run.

The future perfect tense is used for showing an action that will be finished in the future. It usually shows some relation between two actions.

Example 1: Future tense - He will eat his lunch at one o'clock, so we can leave.

Meaning: He will start his lunch at one o'clock which allows us to leave.

Example 2: Future perfect tense - He will have eaten his lunch at one o'clock, so we can leave.

Meaning: He will have finished his lunch before one o'clock which allows us to leave.

Part I: Circle the future perfect verb tense in each of the following sentences.

1. In October I will have run three marathons.
2. Violet will have taken the test when her mother arrives.
3. He will have decided on his project by this afternoon.
4. By the end of this school year, Mrs. Nelson will have taught twenty years.
5. If the baseball pitcher strikes out this batter, he will have pitched a perfect game.

Part II: Fill in the blank with the future perfect form of the verb in parentheses.

1. Jane _____ (do) all the work before Liz starts.
2. When the summer is over, he _____ (forget) everything he learned last year.
3. John _____ (have) plenty of time to prepare when the guest arrive.
4. After I finish this cookie, I _____ (eat) three cookies.
5. If they go to the movies on Saturday, she _____ (see) four movies this week.

Verb Tenses:

Future Perfect

The future perfect verb tense is the past participle tense used with will have or sometimes shall have.

Future tense: I will run.

Future perfect tense: I will have run.

The future perfect tense is used for showing an action that will be finished in the future. It usually shows some relation between two actions.

Example 1: Future tense - He will eat his lunch at one o'clock, so we can leave.

Meaning: He will start his lunch at one o'clock which allows us to leave.

Example 2: Future perfect tense - He will have eaten his lunch at one o'clock, so we can leave.

Meaning: He will have finished his lunch before one o'clock which allows us to leave.

Part I: Circle the future perfect verb tense in each of the following sentences.

1. In October I will have run three marathons.
2. Violet will have taken the test when her mother arrives.
3. He will have decided on his project by this afternoon.
4. By the end of this school year, Mrs. Nelson will have taught twenty years.
5. If the baseball pitcher strikes out this batter, he will have pitched a perfect game.

Part II: Fill in the blank with the future perfect form of the verb in parentheses.

1. Jane _____ will have done _____ (do) all the work before Liz starts.
2. When the summer is over, he _____ will have forgotten _____ (forget) everything he learned last year.
3. John _____ will have had _____ (have) plenty of time to prepare when the guest arrive.
4. After I finish this cookie, I _____ will have eaten _____ (eat) three cookies.
5. If they go to the movies on Saturday, she _____ will have seen _____ (see) four movies this week.